for help in multi-threaded program to simulate a liquid reaction I have been learning threading and I am trying to apply it to a program where I am simulating a liquid reaction by taking either the left or right queues to find out which side the bubbles are going to arrive from. I am basically a newbie and I am running a simulator to calculate the trajectories of the bubbles. My program works fine but the assignment I am doing is to make it run in parallel. Here is my code. #include #include #include #include #include #include #include #define NUM_THREADS 3 #define MAX_ELEMENTS 50 #define MAX_ITERATIONS 100 #define NUM_BUBBLES 5 #define R_INDEX 2 #define L_INDEX 1 void *bubble_simulator(void *thread_id) { // This function will simulate the movement of the bubbles from the left side to the right side in a liquid. // We assume that the right queue will be completely filled. The function will return the bubbles that entered the right queue. // The threads are having to do the same calculations for multiple times so we can call the function with for-loops. bubble_simulator(thread_id, L_INDEX, R_INDEX); return NULL; } void *check(void *thread_id) { // This function will simulate the movement of the bubbles from the left side to the right side in a liquid. // The left queue 3da54e8ca3
