- Imm "I am a big fan of Minnie Mouse and would love to have a castle just like her." A fortress that stands on a foundation of concrete and steel is pretty impressive, isn't it? --- PatientTrades If you want to live in a fortress, there are better options available than Disney. --- Imm Good point, I was thinking mainly of things like the MoMA building. --- PatientTrades And look at the pictures of the Apple campus. The MoMA building is dwarfed by it. Though if I were to really look at it, the Apple is obviously higher than the MoMA building. I'm just saying that the difference in scale is obvious. ----- dredmorbius And there's the history of an image: the first half of the article is devoted to the "Disneyization" of the city, the second to the history of Disney, and the third to Disney's imposition of an anti-urban, anti-human architecture on a huge scale. Disney _means_ huge. He's out there, and not even two hours away in Anaheim. So back in LA in Mayfair and Marine City and Virginia Highlands and Culver City, where "Disney" is not an acceptable word, replace the "Disney" with "Fantasyland" and now you've got the _sign_ of what Disney _means_. There's a reason it's called a Disney _park_, not a Disney _toy_ park. --- dredmorbius From the article: "The result is a Disneyland of fake glamour, next to a real Disney of fake Disney-ness that you only realize while visiting Disney's own park." --- dredmorbius I own about a dozen books on Disney, which details Disney parks around the world. "Disneytown" (under D) is a new concept. Never heard of it before. You'd be surprised how many "Disney" themed neighborhoods or districts exist within a city. --- anamexis Disneyland is in Disney World, which is a separate tourist town and not actually in Anaheim. --- dredmorbius That's technically true.
