Results The issue at the heart of the Olympics is the same as it is in our everyday lives: We are more connected than ever before. But that creates new challenges. I often say that I am lucky to live in the mobile age because I am free to travel. But the greater the connection between people, the more fragile we become. I was talking to a friend who told me that Facebook had just been invaded by a psychopath who caused it to crash. Yes, my friend said, this was a real invasion — from another planet. I asked him: Is he a member of the British Foreign Legion? He said: He's just an ordinary guy. And I really do believe he's from another planet. I asked: What about his Facebook friends? Are they like him? He said: Yes, in a way. But I don't think they are from another planet. I asked: Are they all going to be tempted to join him in the invasion? He said: That's the worrying thing. If all the people he has connected with are psychopaths, then what are they going to do? I said: You are right. But we don't seem to know what to do. In 2012, Facebook brought in an army of economists to work on problems that Facebook is having. But in 2014, it brought in a second army of economists to work on problems that Facebook is having. Facebook's first army studied friendship. Facebook's second army studied loneliness. But people keep on using it, and it keeps on crashing. The first army found that the most powerful thing that makes you like someone is that you know them. That's why you like someone because you know them. But the
