National School Safety Week Today the National Center for Education Statistics publishes the number of school shootings that occurred in 2012. This is the eighth consecutive year that at least 10 school shootings have occurred on school grounds (and in the last four years, at least 21 other mass shootings have occurred not on school grounds). The NFSSW was established in 1997 to raise awareness of violence in schools and the many issues and challenges facing school safety. The annual NFSSW reminds the nation, in no uncertain terms, that the loss of one child is one too many. Here are 10 facts the National School Safety Network compiled about school shootings in the last 10 years: 1. Since 2007, at least 60 school shootings involving the discharge of a firearm have occurred on school grounds. At least 10 of these shootings have resulted in one or more fatalities. 2. Only 10 percent of school shootings are committed by students. The most recent incident involving a student was on the morning of February 20, 2012 at Zones R-14-R-15 at Indianapolis International Airport. A 24-year-old student allegedly shot two 13-year-old girls. The student was arrested and is facing charges of murder. 3. On average, students who commit school shootings are 24 years of age. 4. Schools with one or more incidents of school violence are 8 times more likely to experience the next incident than schools with no incidents. 5. School staff are the second leading target of these shootings. The most recent incidents took place on February 24, 2012, at the Virginia school board meeting in Charlottesville, VA. The perpetrator took the lives of Principal William Woodward and School Superintendent Joe Grace. 6. Students are
